Dear chairperson Karina Boldsen

November 1st marked a historic day for the education possibilities in Aarhus. With the opening of Aarhus Academy for Global Education (AAGE), the city can offer the region a comprehensive, world-class education, from Pre-Kindergarten to Ph.D.

This past year, a small cohort of local and national companies along with Aarhus University envisioned opening an international school that would not only help recruit and retain international talent, but also mirror the commitment of Aarhus University, as well as the city of Aarhus, to work together to find innovative solutions to the world's problems.

AAGE's vision of a campus that combines high academic goals with international services and social responsibility, while strengthening the local community, is aligned to Aarhus University's ambition to fill its role as a modern European university that aims at attracting international talent.

I heartily support AAGE's vision as well as the commitment to offering international families and children an inspiring framework for learning and growing, and I hope to see AAGE flourish as an institution that reflect innovation, development and growth.

With kind regards

Lauritz B. Holm-Nielsen
